

Four pages in a dense scholar's hand. The writing is steady and measured for the first two pages. On the third page it becomes smaller, more compressed, as if the writer was running out of room — or time. A fourth page is nearly blank.

[Page 3:]

The anchors are not lost. The light did not die. It redistributed into ten living vessels born at the moment of inversion. The ritual is incomplete, not failed. The completion requires their release.

[Margin note, different ink, added later:]

The mechanism will not function as designed if the distinction is collapsed. Willing release is not the same mechanism as forced release. This is not a philosophical observation. It is an engineering specification.

[Page 4, one line only:]

No one should be forced.